8.3 If there is a conflict, you and the seller may agree to have the designated agent act as a transaction facilitator. In that case, they work for both sides to bring about a purchase and sale and do not act as sole agent for either of you.

8.4 If the designated agent, you or the seller decide not to have them facilitate the purchase and sale, they will act as the sole agent of the side which first signed a representation agreement with us, unless we all agree otherwise in writing.

If you are a customer, the designated agent's responsibilities are limited to those outlined in the Guide.
